A MURDERER FAINTS AT HIS SENTENCE

Laid on a Table and the Sentence Finished—Probably Skipped for England—A Nebraska Tragedy—Attempt to Wreck a Texas Train—A Murder Mystery Solved.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 11. — Last night Warner, the murderer of Dreger, was sentenced to be hanged at Rennsalear Feb. 24. While being sentenced by the court he dropped to the floor as if he had been shot and lay like a dead man. He was at last placed in a chair, but seemed wholly unconscious until remedies were administered. Then, not being able to stand, he was laid upon a table, and in that state the sentence was finished. His child, who took carbolic acid Monday, is still alive.

FORT WORTH, Tex., Nov. 11.—Mr. E. C. Sanford is a planter, and his home is in Clay county, near the town of Fanning. Last Saturday afternoon Valentine, the 14 year old son of Mr. Sanford, converted that home into a scene of sorrow by one of the most diabolical crimes ever committed in Texas. According to reports received from there to-day, Valentine has had his mind turned by flash literature, and to this is attributed this crime—the killing of his mother. He became possessed of an intense desire to become a brigand, but conceived an idea that his parents were an obs[illegible]e in his march to fame, a[illegible] as he tells the story himself he determined to remove that obstacle. He had many times planned to run away from home, but he wanted money to begin with. He argued that the farm on which the family lived really belonged to him, as his father intended to give it to him, and he determined to enter into possession of his birthright. To do this, he planned the murder of both his parents, after which he thought it would be an easy matter to convert the property into cash enough to equip a band of outlaws. He deliberated on the matter, and finally got ready for action. The opportune time came Saturday afternoon, when his father was away and his mother at work in a field. He sought a convenient place where he could rest his Winchester on the fence and then fired five times at his mother, killing her. Then he concealed the body and got ready to kill his father. When the old man returned in the evening the boy said he had no idea where his mother was and assisted the father in the search which proved fruitless that night. Apparently a favorable opportunity did not present itself and Valentine postponed the second chapter of his work. Sunday night the body of his mother was found, when the boy acknowledged killing her and recited a story of which the above is the substance.

A Murderer's Confession.
Special Telegram to The Star.

SAGUACHE, Col., Nov. 11.—Marshall Clements, the principal defendant in the murder trial, occupied the stand almost the entire day. His story was a repetition of the terrible confession which he made in jail shortly after his arrest, telling how he murdered his brother and wife and buried the bodies. He said the enmity existing between them originated over what his brother and wife said about his prospective bride. He and his brother went out early one morning and suddenly he was seized with a desire to murder him. Acting upon the thought he shot his brother through the back of the head. He dragged the body some distance, dug a shallow grave and buried it. He covered up the trail of where the body had been dragged and then informed the murdered man's wife that her husband was out on the irrigating ditch and desired to see her. When they had arrived at the grave the murderer shot the wife, killing her instantly. Another grave was dug, and Mrs. Clements was buried a short distance from her husband. The murderer then informed his father and sisters that the murdered people had left the county. Witness was put through a rigid cross examination, but he clung to the story as originally told. His testimony was given in a straightforward manner. He did not implicate his father or sisters in any way. Their defence will be to prove an alibi.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

JOLIET, Ill., Nov. 11.—James Young, a convict serving a ten-year term from Carroll county, for burglary, has confessed he is the murderer of Dr. Allen, of Sandwich, Ill. A young man named Wm. Thomas was convicted of this murder on the evidence of a female detective from Chicago and sent to prison for seventeen years. Young is a notorious burglar, who has been an inmate of several western prisons. In his confession he accurately described the premises where Dr. Allen lived. He also drew a diagram of the house, showing the room in which he claims he had the life and death struggle with the murdered man from whose grasp he was endeavoring to escape when he committed the murder. The circuit court of DeKalb county has issued a writ of habeas corpusfor Young and the sheriff of Wood county took him from prison last evening to Sycamore to stand trial for murder. In the meantime Wm. Thomas has served about six years of his seventeen year term, but has always insisted he was innocent. Thomas says he knows nothing regarding James Young, and never saw or heard of him until he came to prison to serve his sentence for the Carroll county burglary.

An Old Murder Confessed.

JOLIET, Ill., Nov. 11.—The murder of Dr. Allen at Sandwich, Ill., six years ago by a burglar, created widespread interest. Wm. Thompson, of Sandwich, a young man of respectable antecedents, was arrested for the crime and principally on the evidence of a female detective from Chicago the case was made out against him and he was sent to Joliet on a seventeen year senetnce. The case has now been revived by the confession of James Young, a convict at Joliet, serving a ten year term from Carroll county. Young confesses that he is the man who murdered Dr. Allen, and accurately described the premises where Dr. Allen lived and also drew a diagram of the residence showing the location of the room in which he claims to have had a desperate struggle with Dr. Allen, and from whose hands he could only escape by shooting him through the brain. The circuit court of DeKalb county found an indictment against Young and issued a writ of habeas corpus for his appearance in that court. Sheriff F. Wood started for Sycamore with Young last evening. William Thomas, the man who has already been in prison over six years for this crime, has always protested he was innocent of Dr. Allen's murder. The impression at the penitentiary prevails that Young is the man who killed Dr. Allen. Young says that remorse for past misdeeds is what compels him to confess the murder.

"Shanghaied" and Drowned.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 11.—When the police went aboard the oyster schooner Coburn, lying in the arbor, to get particulars of the accidental drowning of one of the crew which had been reported, they found that the man had been abducted, or "shanghaied," as it is called. They arrested the captain, named Bovy, and afterwards Shipping Agent Shaney, for conspiracy. The drowned man, whose name was Wm. Thompson, had been inveigled on the schooner by the shipping agent, who collected a month's pay for the recruit in advance and then disappeared. The schooner was then hauled out in the stream. Thompson, after begging to be set ashore, jumped overboard to swim for liberty. His strength failed him and he sank. The captain and shipping agent are in jail.

DENVER, Nov. 11.—Mrs. Wm. Headland, who came here some days ago in search of her husband, has given up the hunt and is now trying to raise money with which to return to Greenfield, Mo. A loose investigation has been made of the matter and it reveals the fact that the couple were pretty well advanced in years when married; that Headland was a man of much determination of character, and that his wife, who was a widow when he met her, had taken up a homestead adjoining his ranch. When they married he paid the expenses of making her claim good and she allowed him to have the deed in his name. At her suggestion the move Missouri was contemplated and she went first, he promising to follow as soon as the property was sold. He wrote to her regularly up to Aug. 24, but since that time she has heard nothing of him. Headland sold the property for about $8,000. A number of people at Castle Rock have been interviewed, among them some who have known Headland for twenty-five years. They speak of him as a careful, stingy Englishman who felt that his matrimonial adventure was a bad one. They feel confident that he is alive and after turning his property into money he has turned his steps toward England, where he intends to remain in the future.

A Mystery Cleared Up.

DENVER, Nov. 11.—Information from Salida says Postmaster Moore received a letter last night from a gentleman in the east who was acquainted with Dr. Nonamaker, the murderer and suicide of that place. The letter reads as follows:

Postmaster of Salida, Col.:

DEAR SIR—I saw in the papers yesterday that Dr. J. H. Nonamaker and his wife had committed suicide. His third wife lives in this place. It was strongly believed that he poisoned his wives Nos. 1 and 2. Will you please give me the particulars of his death and where he came from when he went to your place? He went from here south. I think he is the same man. He was tall and stout.

[Signed.] JOSEPH LEASE.

The above letter throws light upon the character of Nonamaker. There is a settled conviction among the people here that he cruelly murdered his innocent wife and sought to make her name infamous by falsely trying to leave the impression that she died by her own hands. The news to-day is that Mrs. Nonamaker told a lady in town a few days before the tragedy that she had determined to leave her husband and go back to her friends in New York, as the doctor was so cruel and given to fits of madness that she was afraid to live with him.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 11.—Lieutenant Chase, aide-de-camp of General Howard, returned yesterday from Fort Niobrara bringing facts concerning the recent tragedy at that post, which is to be fully investigated, and the soldiers engaged in it brought to justice. Samuel Kirkley, who was dishonorably discharged from the army some months ago, has been at a disreputable resort called "hog ranch," near the fort, and a few nights ago some colored members of the Ninth cavalry, having determined to suppress the place, went to the "hog ranch," and calling Kirkley to the door shot him down without a word of warning. To complete the murder one of them drew a razor and cut Kirkley's throat. Kirkley is yet alive but cannot live two or three days more. One of the troopers concerned in the affair was captured. Shortly afterwards another stole a horse and fled. Others are in hopes to escape punishment by keeping quiet.

DALLAS, Tex., Nov. 11.—Detective Jack Duncan, last night, at a late hour, received a telegram from the Missouri Pacific railroad officials to take the 6:20 train this morning on the Missouri Pacific from Dallas to work up an attempted train wreck, which was made last night near Denton. The scoundrels placed ties on the track with the intention, it is believed, to wreck and rob the south bound express train. The ties were run onto by the engine but the train kept the rails and was stopped in defeat of the scheme of the robbers.

A Celebrated Character.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 11.—There appeared in police court this morning a man of national reputation for lawlessness, Charles C. Reno, of the celebrated Reno family of Indiana, two of whom were lynched at Seymour fourteen years ago, and three others are now serving long terms in Joliet and Jeffersonville prisons. It seems that Charles struck the town several days ago, probably a fugitive from justice in some other city and watching his chance stole an overcoat for which he got a workhouse sentence for nine months.

It is reported that the ambassadors have reached a unanimous decision recommending the complete autonomy of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. The revolution by which the union of the two states was effected is recognized as a fait accompli. The Russian order for the removal of Prince Alexander was overcome by the offer of the vacant throne to Prince Henry of Battenberg, Alexander's younger brother, the husband of Prince Beatrice and son-in-law of the queen of Great Britain. The people believe that General Wallace is coming soon to visit the sultan, and will bring with him the plans of a wonderful apparatus, presumably of his own invention, the purpose of which is to render the approaches to the Bosphorus thoroughly impregnable. The scheme is said to include the use of iron-clads of peculiar construction, and arranged in such a way and with such additional safegurds as to make the Mohammedan capital absolutely secure against invasion. It is not known on what basis, if any, this talk of the town is founded, but the story has won wide credence in Constantinople.

On reaching the hall Mr. Gladstone found it literally packed with people, waiting to hear his address. He is now speaking.

Mr. Gladstone said it was impossible for parliament to deal with the Irish question satisfactorily except by action of a party powerful enough to act independently of the Irish vote. According to Tory as well as Liberal reports, such a party in the coming parliament can only be the Liberal party.

MONTREAL, Nov. 11.—At a meeting of the imperial federation branch here last night a resolution was unanimously adopted that in place of the imperial federation of British possessions should be included a system of trade interchange between the several component parts of the empire upon terms more favorable than are extended to foreign countries, unless such foreign countries should establish reciprocal trade relations with the federation. The Wrangle Over Priority of Inventions—A Polygamous Postmaster Bounced—Other Washington News.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 10.—The hearing in the telephone cases was resumed before the secretary of the interior to-day. Mr. Gantt, for the citizens of Memphis, read a long list of affidavits and authorities that he intended to put in evidence, intending to show that Bell was not the original inventor of the telephone. Among the papers was a communication from acting attorney, General Goode, expressing the opinion that Reiss was the inventor of the telephone and that Bell's patents had been regularly issued, justifying in his opinion the beginning of the suit by the United States to set it aside.

EDISON'S AFFIDAVIT.

The hearing in telephone cases was resumed before Secretary Lamar this morning. Citizens of Memphis, represented by counsel, petitioned that the Bell patent be cancelled and submitted a numher of affidavits, among them one by Thomas A. Edison, showing the priority of invention in telephones. Mr. Edison swears the carbon telephone now in operation, and the transmitting telephones now used by the American Bell Telephone company employ his inventions, and the dates of some of his plates are, he believes, stamped upon their transmitters. He had no knowledge of Bell's alleged invention in speaking telephones when he made his inventions, nor of Reis's publication at that time. An affidavit of Mr. Van Benthuysen was also submitted show he had operated the Vanderwyck-Pickering telephone, which are said to be older than those operated by Bell. Other similar affidavits were also submitted.

Why the Office Stopped.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—First Assistant Postmaster General Stevenson has discontinued a postoffice in Utah, not because the postmaster did not give entire satisfaction to the community he served, but because that community was composed entirely of himself, four wives rnd seventeen daughters. Besides, under the Edmunds act a man with four wives is incapable of holding public office.

An Astonishing Scene at Sea.

A singular scene was witnessed by some sailors off the Irish coast a few days ago. The sea was calm, and many birds were seen moving about with great rapidity, occasionally disappearing beneath the water and coming up again half strangled. As the vessel approached it was seen that a shoal of fish several acres in extent was visible upon the water. A bird would light on the back of a fish, spread its tail or wings to catch the breeze, dig its claws deep into the finny monster's hide and go before the wind with such speed as to soon drown its victim. The bird would chen devour the fish at its leaisure

BLASTED RELICS.

Remarkable Exhumations—A Cedar Tree 1,000 Years Old—A Fish More than a Million Years Old—Facts of the Findings.

Davenport Gazette.

In the widening of Sixth street between Harrison and Ripley streets, by the excavation of a width of forty feet of the hill on the north side of the street, Contractor Keleher's employes have come upon a very interesting subterranean condition of soil, and in that soil was enfolded the trunk of a tree which is believed to be cedar. The upper stratum of the hill was the light yellow clay such as are abundant in the bluffs of this section, and which is used for making bricks. This single stratum, from the surface to where a stratum of different kind of earth was struck, was thirty feet thick. Then there was a bluish clay of a thickness of four to six feet, and then a black, hard soil, which, geologists say, is rock in the process of disintegration—a thickness of six feet of it—which could be excavated best by blasting. The other day a blast uncovered a trunk of the tree—some twenty feet in the side of the hill, and forty-five feet below the surface. It was ten to twelve feet in length, and half of it was broken to pieces by the blast; but there was a mold of its entire length in the hard formation. The outward surface of the round pieces was coated with stone as if the wood itself had commenced a process of petrifaction. The wood had not been exposed to the air more than twenty minutes before it lost its hardnes, became spongy, and entered upon a rapid process of decay. Thorough drying arrested this tendency, but still the wood remained soft and flakey.

How many years—hundreds, thousands, or millions—that tree has been in the soil which enfolded it nobody can tell. The hill formerly sloped south to Fifth street and east half way to Main street. With the hill in that shape the wood was more than fifty feet from the top surface and more than 100 feet from the side surfaces. Geologists do not believe the tree was growing there when it was leveled; they believe it was deposited there through glacial action, or by means of upheaval in "the eternity of the past."

But over on Rock Island, on Thursday last, there was a discovery that was even still more interesting than the one in the Sixth street hill. There was excavation, by means of blasting in solid rock, going on for the purpose of a foundation for a building. And one of the blasts at the depth of six or eight feet from the surface, cast out a petrified fish—as perfect a fish in fins, scales, shape, and part of the head as can be caught in the Mississippi. Part of the tail is missing and part of the head—both broken by the blast—but otherwise it is a perfect fish. It is two feet long and twelve inches in circumference. Part of "the case" in which it lay in the rock is as perfect a mold as you ever saw, but it was impossible to get it, for the rock was so brittle. Many interesting geological conditions have been discovered in the excavations on the island, but none more remarkable than this of a fish in solid rock, of which it had become a part, yet with all its distinctness preserved. This relic of the Devonian age of the paleozoic time is one of the valuable specimens in the arsenal cabinet.

MIDDLETON'S OPINIONS.

What the Canadian General Has to Say About Riel's Case and Other Matters.

Special Telegram to The Star.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 11.—Major General Fred Middleton and his aide-de-camp, Captain Wise, of the English army, arrived here yesterday morning, having just arrived from Winnipeg. The general is a man a little below medium height, weighing about 200 pounds and a trifle bow-legged. He wears a rather heavy grey mustache and is comparatively free from English accent. When your correspondent approached he was very courteous, and expressed himself as having been very kindly treated by American newspaper men. In speaking of the Riel case, he said he had no knowledge of any respite having been granted until next Monday, as reported from Regina; but there was no question, he thought, as to the ultimate result. Riel will unquestionably hang. He did not believe there would be any violent demonstration, and thinks that when the execution occurs it will pass off very quietly.

In speaking of the military school about to be established in Winnipeg he said that all arrangements had been made, and the only thing now wanting was the house, which would be secured at once. Though he had never seen the United States militia he said he fancied there was considerable difference in the tactics used. He expressed his wish to visit West Point and other schools of military training in the United States. The Royal Military academy at Kingston, he said, was, in his opinion, the finest in the world. Captain Wise, his aide-de-camp, was a graduate from that institution. The general left this city in the afternoon for Montreal, from whence he goes to New Brunswick in the discharge of his military duties as inspector.

Sheriff took it home with him, and when he got up this morning started out to play. The cartridge exploded in his hand, blowing it off. REFORMERS' MEETING.

CONFERENCE OF THE FREE TRADERS.

A Large Number of Delegates Already in Attendance—What is Needed to Promote Free Trade Sentiments in this Country—Proceedings of the Conference.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—The national conference of free traders and revenue reformers met at Haverly's minstrel hall shortly after 10 o'clock this morning. Some 200 delegates from all parts of the country were in attendance. The conference was called to order by its president, the Hon. David A. Wells, after which General T. N. Stiles, of Chicago, delivered an address of welcome, after which the report and address of A. R. Bowker, honorary secretary of the conference, was read. Mr Bowker said there were still organizations in behalf of revenue reform in thirteen states and local organizations in many other states. Most of these are in relation with the American Free Trade league which is now organized as a national association. Mr. Bowker hoped this conference would select a man from each state, who would become the promoter of organization throughout the state and its general representative. In relation to the free trade movement, the speaker urged on free traders the necessity for planning for a great campaign, the first step towards which is the raising of a fund of $200,000, which will be needed this and next year in view of the congressional elections of 1886. One-third of this sum is already pledged. "We will show before New Year's, 1887, such use of it that the country will then come to our support as England came to the support of Cobden and Bright."

An address on "Tariff, in its relation to farmers," was then read by J. L. Smith, of Ohio, which ended the morning session.

Frank Hurd, Henry Watterson, J. Sterling Morton and others will deliver addresses to-night.

Henry Ward Beecher speaks to-morrow,

The Third Struggle for Liberty.
Chicago Times (Tuesday).

It promises to be the most important gathering of its kind ever held in this country, and to give a decided impetus to the third great American struggle for liberty—the struggle for industrial and commercial liberty; for the emancipation of the mass of the people from the status of tribute-paying bondsmen to a few "captains of industry" who have been armed by congress with the power of taxation. The conference was called by the executive committee of the American Free-Trade league, of which the Hon. David A. Wells is president, and which has already done much to promote the cause of freedom.

The upholders of the spoliation system are forever asserting that the free-traders are a lot of visionary theorists, mere closet students, who know nothing of the practical business of life. And they are forever asserting that those who are not mere theorists are enemies of "American industries," especially of manufacturing industries, and are hired with "British gold" to talk free trade in this country. A pretty conclusive answer to this sort of assertion will be found in the fact that the most of those whose who are to address the conference are men who are actively engaged in the very industries that are supposed to be protected by our tariff laws. Indeed, the most of them are manufacturers who have become convinced that the tariff taxes hurt far more than they help, and that what our manufacturers most need at this time is emancipation from the tariff bondage.

It is not to be supposed that all of these are now radical free-traders. The invitation to the conference has not been restricted to such. It is to be expected, therefore, that a considerable diversity of views will be developed. But the one important fact is that all these manufacturers are in favor of a larger measure of industrial and commercial liberty than the people of this country have enjoyed for nearly a quarter of a century. They want to set out on the march in the direction of liberty. That should be enough for the most radical free trader, who may be sure that when the march has once begun its momentum will carry it forward to complete emancipation. That was what happened when the march for the union was begun. The millions who didn't quite mean freedom when they started meant all of it before they stopped. It will be so again.

ALL EXPECT TO BE TIPPED.

Begging Reduced to a Fine Art in Great Britain.

The begging proclivity is so dominant here writes a London correspondent of the New York Sun, that the public is forever requested to resist it, but the public dare not. You are told not to give any gratuity to railway servants, for instance, but those servants will hover about you, coddle your rugs, nurse your umbrella, or polish the handles of your car cab door till you bribe them off. Neither are they always easily satisfied. One day at the Charing Cross station I handed a three-penny piece to a sturdy giant who had brought my small portmanteau to my cab.

"What's this?" was his acknowledgment. "I ham not ha-going to clean ye hout. Ye give hit ter yer missus with my love."

Another time, at Waterloo station, having a bigger lot of boxes, I gave the porter 1s. 6d. I thought the man would be greatly pleased.

"Beg yer pardon, sir," said he, "but there were two on hus for this 'ere job. Now, what gou gave hain't much for one, and won't do at all for two."

At the King's Cross terminus of the Great Northern railway, having once a good amount of luggage, I inquired from the porter if he thought I had more than the allowance.

"Ye look to me, sir," was his reply, "hand I shall look to ye, hand there will be no nothink to pay for 'em."

All these men are cautioned against asking for anything, and the public are warned against tipping them.

But begging does not flourish solely along the endless lines of the English railways. It has to be fenced with everywhere. If you pay a visit in the country to a friend, however high or however humble, his servants will expect something from you. The most imposing butler, the most refined lady's maid, the most supercilious coachman, the best bred game keeper, as well as the maid of all work, reckon on a donation from visitors, and those who through ignorance, forgetfulness, or reduced circumstances omit to gratify their greed, or whose gifts are thought inadequate, learn their mistake and the importance of repairing it by the hints dropped at their next visit.

For one or two nights in a large country place a gentleman alone will give from 10 to 15 shillings—10 shillings to the butler, 5 shillings to the coachman. Of course he may give more if he likes, but that is enough. If he has been shooting he will, besides, give £1 to the gamekeeper. If he has brought his valet with him he is not bound to give so much to the indoor servants, but of course he will still fee the coachman and the gamekeeper.

Ladies generally give to the maids. For more than two days and less than ten these fees are doubled. After that the gradation of the punishment diminishes. In small houses the feeling is, of course, less severe. In London, if you dine at a nobleman's in the west end you don't fee the servants; but I have seldom dined at the houses of men of business, in the suburbs especially, where, in imitation of the other guests, I have not felt bound to give from one shilling to half a crown.

Some years ago a leading member of the aristocracy hung the following notice in his country place.

You are requested to give no vales to the servants.

But this meritorious effort simply served to show the intensity of the abuse. It has not even ruffled it.

The time we are nearing is the great annual saturnalia of the English beggar. The Christmas box is a national institution. On the day following Christmas your bell will chime incessantly from dawn till night, and you will be begged from till you fear to become a beggar yourself. Parish employes, government servants, as well as the retainers of private companies, tradesmen's assistants, and independent individuals, all join in the run as bloodthirsty as hounds. There are the postman, the scavenger, the dustman, the lamplighter, the turncock, the butcher's boy, and half a score of other boys. Then, of course, your own servants are also lying in wait for you, and likewise the retinue of your best friends. If your good star has made a foreign minister of you you are still expected to give a guinea or two to the usher at the foreign office, and the same to the one at the treasury, and to the park keepers.

Some years ago the house I live in was robbed. I succeeded in recovering a very small part of my loss, but, as a matter of fact, I did not get back anything, as I made, according to custom, a present to the detectives. About the same time, having lost my way in one of the small streets running along the Thames, I inquired my way from a constable, who, having directed me, asked me to give him something to drink. The metropolitan police, on the whole, however, deserve much more praise than criticism.

Some time ago, as I was going home, I saw a small crowd close to a public house at the corner of our street. In the middle of it a violent and most muscular fellow was fighting with a young policeman just half his size. A more unequal mill could hardly be conceived. At the feet of the ruffian was an enormous and suspicious looking bag. The ruffian had tried to run away, but the young policeman had collared him and would not dream of letting him go. He was perfectly exhausted and overmatched. The crowd was hostile and sympathized with the villian. Having seen two other policemen in the adjoining street I ran for them, and brougt them to the spot just in time, probably, to save their mate's life. A few days later I met the gallant constable, and offered him some money as an acknowledgement of the manner in which he was doing his duty to our neighborhood. He refused peremptorily to accept it. He was a man of the D division, and, to judge from his brogue, was an Irshman.

If you visit historical manors or great houses in the country you have to give something to the person who shows you over the place. If you go to a naval station and are invited to go on one of the ships, the royal sailors who row you expect you to give them something for their trouble.

Being at Portsmouth with a few ladies the other day, we went to see the Victory, the ship on which Nelson fought and died at Trafalgar. When you arrive on board that great relic an officer begs you to read a notice, in which you are cautioned against giving anything to the man who will take you over, but you are told that should you like to make a donation to place it in a box put there for the sailors' widow and orphan fund. As we were issuing from the dark corner of the Victory, in which one of the greatest admirals who ever lived breathed his last, the soldier who was showing us round whispered in my ear.

"You know, sir, you need not take any notice of the paper they made you read and put anything in the box, but you can give to me if you like."

One day not long ago a well known American novelist was visiting Westminster abbey in the company of one of the greatest English writers. They had been conducted by a most polite and intelligent ecclesiastic. At the end of the visit the American turned toward his companion and asked him what [illegible]do—if he dared offer anything to such a gui[illegible]

"Of course," was the answer, "you can dare. I do not know of any abbey in England where you could not give something to almost everybody—except, maybe, the dean."

Fashion in Rare Crystal.
New York Mail and Express.

"The fashion in punch bowls runs to glass this season," said a leading dealer, "and we have just received some beautiful ones. They are in tints, amber pale blue, pink and yellow. We have some of heavy cut-glass, in the style of Louis XI., which are very beautiful and very expensive, but the most unique design is one copied from the Russian. We have them at all prices from $25 to $100. There is still a demand for bowls of decorated china with cups to match, and Minton and Copeland, the London makers, send us some very beautiful designs, decorated with flowers which are laid on in such a natural manner that one is almost tempted to sniff for the odor.

"These bowls come as high as $125 and the cups are corresponding dear. The old bell-shaped champagne glass is obsolete. Fashion decrees that sparkling wine shall be drunk from small, straight tumblers, and we have sets in all styles. The most beautiful are the opalescent glasses, which are in colors and delicately shaded from the bottom, which is milk white to the rim, where the color is very marked. They bring from $10 to $35 per dozen. There are sea greens, blues, royal blues, ambers and pinks. One of the most expensive and beautiful tumblers is copied after a solitary specimen found by a collector in an old German inn. We have them in all tints, but what adds to their beauty and cost is the inlaying, which is of solid metal, in gold and silver. These bring from $30 to $40 per dozen.

Fire Record.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—The Empire plaster mills, Nos. 21 and 23 Bethune street, a six story brick building owned by Aug. Isaacs & Brother, caught fire between 3 and 4 o'clock this morning and was almost completely destroyed in less than an hour. About fifteen minutes after the fire broke out, and while the firemen were stretching hose to the building, a cloud of dense thick smoke enveloped them and they had just time to jump backward into the hallway, when all the eastern end of the building in the rear fell and the neighboring yards were covered with a mass of bricks, plaster and machinery. Augustus Isaacs estimates the loss on building, stock and machinery at $50,000; insurance $27,000.

How a Cotton Thief was Caught.
Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

Mr. Eli Woodruff, of Dooly county, has been missing cotton from his cotton house for some time, and adopted a very novel way to catch the thief. He clipped up a number of small scraps of paper, wrote his name on each piece and scattered them in his pile of cotton before retiring one night. He got up next morning and examined his cotton, and found about half a bale missing, and immediately commenced searching the neighborhood for his lost cotton. He was not long in locating his autographs in an old negro's pile of seed cotton, whom he arrested and carried to Vienna jail.

Overtaxing Himself.
New York Sun.

"Poor George!" said a fond mother, referring to her son, who is home on a vacation from college. "Poor George! I am afraid he is studying too hard. Last night he was reading in his room until after 1 o'clock."

"What was he reading?" inquired the old man.

"English literature," she said. "Hoyle, I think, was the name I saw on the cover."

Tue Umpire Outshouts the Parson.
Ouray (Colo.) Solid Muldoon.

The devil had his own way in Denver last Sunday. A base ball game and a camp meeting, both in progress at the same time, and only distant a square apart. The call to the mourners' bench by the parson was many times interrupted by the wild yell of the umpire, who sent a man to first on called balls.

How Thickly the Salmon Swim.
Coquille (Ore.) Herald.

The run of salmon into the river is unparalleled. At the mouth of the river they are so thick that a person can kill them with an oar as he pulls his boat along. A drift-net was put out at Machado's the other day and at the end of half an hour it was so full that it was with difficulty got ashore. It was found to contain 137 salmon.

AT WORK ON THE CASE.

CONWAY IS STILL ON THE STAND.

A Close and Searching Cross-Examination—The Husband of the Murdered Wife and Child Tells of His Business Dealings With Turner—The Coupling Pin.

The preliminary examination of Thomas Turner, charged with the murder of Mrs. Katharine Conway, was resumed in Squire Teasdale's court this afternoon, at 1:30 o'clock, with Conway still upon the stand undergoing cross-examination.

"When I lived in Osborne, Mo.," he said, "I was never aware of a coupling pin being thrown in my yard. I never heard anything of a man named Wheeler interfering with any relations between my wife and a miller before we were married. I remember of coupling pins being in my yard at Osborne, and I have used them to heat water when killing hogs. I don't recollect the names of any men who helped me. When I moved from Osborne to St. Joseph I did not take an coupling pins with me. I don't remember of ever stopping at the railroad track which crosses Grand avenue, but would not swear to it. I would not swear that I did not get out of my wagon there; I do not know of any occurrence that I would have had to stop there. I would not swear that I did not get out of my wagon at the railroad track on the morning of Oct. 21, but I would be likely to remember it if I had stopped. The coat and vest I had on at that time are now at my barn. The coat and vest I now have on I got at Morgan's, on the morning of Oct. 22. I did not tell Mr. Franklin, the clerk, not to ask me any more questions. I told the clerk that my name was Conway, and that I was the husband of the Mrs. Conway and father of the little girl that was murdered. I do not recollect of anything else. I wore the clothes, which I took off, two or three days since the 21st of October. When I returned home that morning I ate breakfast alone, but do not remember what I had. When I returned after the murder I saw the plate with bread, cold meat, etc., upon it. I did not leave it, and it was not a portion of my breakfast. I looked at the clock when I ate breakfast and saw that it was 9 o'clock. I don't remember of testifying yesterday that I looked at no clock during the day except the one in the barn. On the morning of the murder my wife had on no dress with color, but some kind of striped dress goods. I think she had no apron, but I am not positive about it. I do not know what shoes she had on. When I laid down that morning I laid upon the bed on which my wife was murdered. On a few occasions I remained at home as late as 1 o'clock, but I never remember of staying as late as 1:30 o'clock. I do not remember seeing Mr. Turner in the vacant lot as late as 1:20 o'clock, neither do I know where Mr. Turner got his dinner. The first time I saw Mr. Turner was at my barn in Wesport, about six weeks ago. I sent word to him to come and see me. My hired man was present and I believe overheard the conversation. I made a bargain with Mr. Turner, the time he came to the barn. He agreed to take all the milk at the right price and according to the terms, I think he paid me in milk."

Mr. Beebe began to press the witness a little, at this point owing to the negative, and generally answering—"I don't remember very positively." Major Woodson made objections to certain questions upon this point, saying that the witness did not understand, while the questions and answers were unintelligible. The court speedily overruled the objections. Continuing the witness said:

"Mr. Turner agreed to pay me $1 per month for leaving his cans in my yard. I don't remember when the dollar was due, but think he did not pay me. I don't know why I don't remember. The dollar was all that remained to be settled, I think. I don't remember owing Mr. Turner anything. I think I would know if I owed him anything. I believe when we settled there was some little balance due him. I believe some little matters came up in the meantime, but I don't know. Turner came to my house to settle for the route about eight or ten days before the murder.

POISONED WATER.

About Forty Persons Fall Victims by Drinking the Water.

CHATTANOOGA, Nov. 11.—About ten days ago three members of a family named Morris, who had been receiving water from a well near the cotton factory, became very ill and a day or two afterward four other members of the same family became ill. Soon there were twenty people in that locality quite sick and the manager of the mill became a victim. Last night six more persons were taken down, and it is feared cannot recover. An investigation has been commenced and it is thought some miscreants have poured a quantity of poison into the well. Fully forty persons have been affected.

The grand jury is now in session and it is thought indictments will be brought against the ringleaders.

AT last St. Louis has got a new postmaster, the successful candidate being WILLIAM HYDE, late of the Missouri Republican. St. Louis will now disappear from the public view until some great scandal or sensational murder again attracts public attention to that "usually quiet town."

NEWSPAPER readers will regret to learn that war has been declared by the Indian government against Burmah, for geographical names in that section of the world are spelled with an utter disregard of all known laws of orthography, and some of the results achieved by the prevailing system would put Afghan or Soudanese lexicographers to the blush.

THE Turks evidently have great faith in the military genius of General LEW WALLACE, late United States minister at Constantinople. There is a story comes from that distant city that the ex-minister is looked for every day to return with some kind of a defensive apparatus, the nature and details of which do not seem to be known, but which is guaranteed, according to popular belief, to furnish absolute protection to the city of Constantinople and to render the Bosphorus impassable for foreign fleets. How the story ever got started is a mystery, but that it is implicitly believed there can be no doubt. General WALLACE will probably find enough to do at home to keep him busy, without interesting himself in the struggles of Turkey to maintain her foothold on European soil.

THE evil results of reading books of the "yellow-back" variety was never more clearly illustrated than in a case reported in our telegraph columns to-day from Texas. A boy 14 years of age had read so much of the trash that he had become thoroughly imbued with the idea that he was intended by nature for a second DICK TURPIN or JESSE JAMES. One obstacle which stood in the way was a lack of money. To overcome this he resolved to murder both his parents and carried out his intention so far as to murder his old mother with a Winchester rifle. He hid her body, and then watched an opportunity to slay his father. Here is where he lost his grip, however. The desired opportunity failed to come, and in the search which followed his mother's body was found when the would-be bandit told the whole story and confessed the murder. He said he had intended to kill both his parents and then sell the farm in order to raise the money for his equipment as a road agent.

THE showing made by the clearing house statement of last week is one of general prosperity unequalled by any six days for several years past. The increase for the whole country as compared with the same period last year was 48.6 per cent, and outside of New York city 21.4. New York not only led in gross amount of clearings, but also in percentage of gain—62.5. Detroit with 54.9 was the only other city to report a gain of more than 50 per cent, and Providence with 46 per cent was the only one between 40 and 50 per cent. Four cities gained between 30 and 40 per cent—Kansas City, 37.9; Louisville, 36.5; Milwaukee, 34.5 and Boston 32.8. Philadelphia gained 28.6 per cent and Hartford 20.2 per cent. Eight places reported between 10 and 20 per cent increase and six less than 10 per cent. In but four cities were losses recorded: Cleveland 9.4, Baltimore 7.6, Lowell 3.3 and Syracuse 2.4. For the first week in November, and that an election week in many of the leading trade-centers, this is truly a wonderful showing of returning prosperity. All the leading commercial interests are reporting increased business while mills, factories and mines which have long been idle are resuming work and thus giving employment to thousands who have hitherto had no means to purchase.

THE national free trade conference opened this morning in Chicago with a large number of the leading advocates of free trade of the country in attendance. Among the subjects specially treated will be the following: "The Tariff in its Relation to Farmers," by Hon. J. Q. SMITH, of Ohio, who is a farmer and a wool-grower; "The Lumber Duty and Forestry Protection," by Hon. J. STERLING MORTON, of Nebraska; "Pauper Labor in Europe," by Mr. THOMAS G. SHEARMAN, who is now in Europe investigating the subject, and has forwarded a report; "Free Raw Material," by Mr. J. B. SARGENT, the leading hardware manufacturer of New Haven, Conn.; "The Wool Question," by Mr. ROWLAND HAZARD, a well known woolen manufacturer of Rhode Island; "On Agricultural Machinery," Mr. M. D. HARTER, of Mansfield, O.; "On Iron," by Mr. LINDLEY VINTON, of the Vinton iron works, Indianapolis; "On Shoes and Leather," by HOWARD M. NEWHALL, a shoe manufacturer, of Lynn, Mass.; "On Ship-Building and Shipping," by Mr. W. G. GIBBONS, a ship-builder of Wilmington, Del. It will be seen from the subjects to be discussed and the men who are to discuss them that there is no truth in the oft repeated charge of the protectionists that the advocates of free trade are mere theorists who have no practical experience in the branches of industry which are alleged to be protected by our present tariff system. It is notable that most of those who will make addresses at this conference are manufacturers and business men who, by practical experience, have become convinced of the falsity of the protectionist theory.

Ex-Mayor Daniel R. Frink Passes Away at Dawn.

Brief Sketch of an Honorable, Active Career.

A Boy Badly Injured by a Dynamite Cartridge.

Hume Brought Back---Other City News of the Day.

Death of Ex-Mayor Frink.

The death of ex-Mayor Frink occurred at his home, 320 West Sixth street, at 6:45 this morning. He had been failing in health for many months, and no one better realized than he that no human power could stay the fatal and persistent progress of the disease which had fastened itself upon him. During the past week or ten days he sank rapidly, and several times was so near death that the feeble fluttering of his heart could scarcely be detected, but as often his vitality, which at times seemed wonderful, drew him back to consciousness and gave him strength to make yet another struggle against the inevitable. It was a hopeless conflict, however, for the balancing point between life and death had been passed and every effort made to beat back the inroads of the disease could but end in slightly prolonging his existence. The fortitude displayed by the sufferer in his last hours was wonderful. Realizing that all hope of recovery was gone, he resigned himself to the inevitable and looked upon the approach of death with the calmness of a philosopher.

He was born at Ellington, Conn., in 1834, but when quite young emigrated to Michigan. For a few years he followed the profession of an actor, but finally abandoned the stage and adopted a profession more congenial to his domestic nature. In 1867 he left Michigan and settled in this city which has since been his home.

There are few men in the city better known and none more highly esteemed than the deceased. During his eighteen years' residence in this city he has done much towards furthering the interest of the city and has twice been called upon to hold public offices. In 1879 he was elected county judge and in 1881 he succeeded Chace as mayor of Kansas City, his political opponent being Milton Moore. He made a just and an efficient city executive, and his every official act had for its object the advancement of the city's interest. Since his retirement he has led a quiet, domestic life.

He was a person of a strongly happy temperament, and this characteristic followed him to the last. Even in the death chamber his keen sense of humor asserted itself, and when those about him thought the struggle all but ended he would suddenly call some friend to his bedside and drop some remark which showed that he still looked upon the bright, cheerful side of life. He knew that death was near, and expressed himself as willing to die.

Ex-Mayor Frink was 51 years old, and leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss. The disease that caused his death was consumption.

GIVE US COMFORT.

A Correspondent Who Has Some Suggestions for the Council.

To the Editor of The Star:

Will not THE STAR again stir up our city council on the too much and too long neglected question of having the names of the streets marked upon street corners—the question was agitated a little by the press last winter or spring but the magnitude of the how it should be done, and how it could be done and have it cost next to nothing seemed to utterly destroy the city fathers' faint desire to accomplish anything in that direction. Doubtless these gentlemen can, from having grown up with the city, succeed in finding their way to their outlying real estate and it is fair to presume that they do not realize the great amount of inconvenience that the lack of street marks cause people not thoroughly acquainted here. Streets have been opened out to reach everybody's patch of precious Kansas City soil while not one comer in, perhaps, twenty has the name of the street upon it, and where a lamp is properly marked, the number of times it is left, after lighting, turned one-fourth around so as to direct one the wrong way, almost causes one to feel that it is part of the programme here to prevent one from, instead of assisting him to, find a given location. I heard a gentleman from a neighboring city say a few days ago that he had visited nearly every city west of the Missouri river in the United States and that Kansas City excelled them all in absolute neglect of everything that tends to the comfort and convenience of strangers. Let a man start from his hotel fairly instructed by some friend as to the route he is to take and by the time he has turned a few corners and fished his rubbers out of one or two of our patent clay street crossings, he has partly or wholly forgotten which way to go next, "lost his count" of the number of blocks he has gone, and after staring at all sides of the street lamps until he feels that people take him for a tenderfoot from the country home of his father, he has to begin to ask for information regarding which way to go. As quite a large portion of those we meet on the streets, are strangers, like himself he is very likely to have the opportunity of repeating his question several times before he gets the required information or anything more than, "don't know," for a reply from those he meets, as he wanders on with another strong temptation to profanity added to the list. Not long since I had a lamp marked with the name of the streets at the corner where I was engaged in business, and for the convenience of the lamp-lighter, as I supposed, marked it with the name of each street on the sides as he left the lamp the day before, and by actual count that lamp was only left in that way, showing the streets correctly, three times in four weeks, and now it is taken down and a plain lamp put in its place. Now, the fact is this, we never forget to tax everything we can find that has any value. The seamstress, who perhaps still owes in part for her sewing machine, stove and clock, is required to contribute her quota of taxes. We tax all kinds of business until taxes and the enormously inflated rents are bankrupting our merchants, or, at least, rendering the business of more than one-half of them non-paying. We have now succeeded in devising, under the guise of milkmen's license, a law which amounts to about a 40 per cent advalorem tax on the milk that the poor man feeds to his children, but we are so dreadfully in earnest in our pursuit of wealth and gain that we can't stop our investigation of some real estate or other money-grabbing project long enough to remember and act upon such small matters as simply pertain to the convenience of the common people, or go to make up, as a whole, the beauty of a town. We can't afford it. We can't afford to half light our streets, or fix our street crossings and sidewalks. We can't afford to keep policemen enough so that you can signal one in case of need without a cannon—not so much for lack of money as lack of time. The old money-bags which were filled by the rise of real estate here are now being sat down upon by their owners, who sleep quietly, only when roused by the clinking of imported coin, when they reach out, make a grab for it and go to sleep again, caring for nothing but to accumulate a vast pile, unless it be to keep it thoroughly well sat upon, and out of the sight of the assessor. I am heartily glad whenever the wonderful growth and great natural advantages of Kansas City calls forth the loud praise and admiration of both east and west; but were it not for the aggressive interest taken by the press, the constant warnings not to go backward, but to press earnestly forward, to beautify and render attractive the city, as well as to enrich ourselves, I fear we might ever remain, as we now are, a great, straggling, uncouth and untidy town, with a few wealthy men, a host of struggling merchants, and laborers without employ. CITIZEN.

A VAGRANT'S YARN.

A Dizzy Plunge from a High Social Position—A Fugitive for Years.

Albert Sydow was arrested yesterday on the charge of vagrancy and this evening will take a ride to the workhouse. This morning he made a special request to be allowed to make a confession to some one. To Sprague Taylor he unraveled the thread of his life's history. He says that he is a deserter from Baton Rouge, La., where he was quartered fourteen years ago. While there he served under Captain Bernard and afterwards under Captain Walker. Before the war he was a member of one of the leading southern families, but he fell from position and afterwards embraced the opportunity to go into the army at that station. While there he met a young man with whom he had always been at war, a feud having existed between the families of the two. They got along peaceably, however, until one day family matters came up as a topic of conversation, then of dispute. Both being passionate, in a moment they were fighting out their fued. Soon he was under his antagonist, and, forgetting all else, plunged a knife into him. The blow was directed at the heart, but fortunately glanced off. He was placed in the guard house on the charge of assault to kill. By a clever scheme he succeeded in making his escape, only to be a fugitive, and every moment to be filled with fears of capture. For fourteen years he has wandered about, with the sound of pursuit incessantly ringing in his ears. Worked up and unhappy, it is no wonder that he looked relieved after telling Taylor these facts this morning. Letters will be immediately sent to Baton Rouge and an investigation made.

CHAT ABOUT CARRIERS.

The Rumor that Several Have Resigned is Unfounded—The Carrier Can be Removed Only for Cause.

An opinion prevails among certain citizens that as soon as Mr. Shelley takes charge of the postoffice all the present carriers will be formed in line, marched to the back door and ordered to leave. This belief has no foundation at all. Mr. Shelley has emphatically stated on more than one occasion since his appointment that no wholesale "bouncing" would follow his taking charge of the office, as it would be quite impossible to conduct the business of the postoffice as it should be conducted, if all the old men were cast out and their places filled by green hands.

It is doubtless this erroneous belief that has given rise to the report that several carriers had handed in their resignations. This report, however, is absolutely without foundation. Not a single carrier has resigned and none of them have expressed a determination to do so. In fact, they feel quite certain that they will not feel the keen edge of the political knife for some time yet, and it would be foolish to give up a good situation without being requested to do so. "Stay and be bounced," is their motto. When asked in reference to the report that carriers resigning their positions on account of Mr. Shelley's appointment, Colonel Case said:

"The report is not true; not one of the carriers has resigned; that is something Republican office-holders don't do. As a matter of fact the carriers could not be removed without cause. The postmaster can recommend a removal, but he cannot discharge a carrier even if there are good reasons for doing so. If a carrier is found to be dishonest the postmaster can suspend him at once and appoint another to fill the vacancy; then he must report the matter to the postmaster-general and await orders from headquarters. Carriers come under civil service regulations and, therefore, they cannot be removed without cause."

The position of assistant postmaster is, however, one over which the postmaster exercises more control. This, perhaps, is one of the reasons why about nine-tenths of the office seekers who shadow the footsteps of Mr. Shelley want to be assistant postmaster.

Speaking about the applications he has received, Mr. Shelley stated that he had heard from seven er eight states. Some of the letters received are from men he has never heard of, and the manner in which they urge their claims leads to the belief that they are professional office seekers.

A Reward Offered.

Governor Martin, of Kansas, yesterday offered a reward of $300 for the arrest of the murderer of Christian Schubert. The readers of THE STAR will remember the circumstances of Schubert's death, which were published at the time. He was a resident of Leavenworth, and about the latter week of September disappeared from his home. He was seen in Kansas City a few days later, however, and this was the last heard of him until the morning of the 28th of September, when he was found lying dead with a bullet through his head, on the Sixth street bridge, in Kansas City, Kas. Foul play was suspected, and the coroner's jury returned a verdict that he was murdered by some unknown persons.

Claims of an Architect.

Yesterday's session of Judge Slover's division of the circuit court, was occupied with the hearing of the case of S. E. Chamberlain vs. A. Boutin. Boutin lives in the east, and formerly run the department house at the corner of Twelfth and Main streets, now occupied and owned by Roll, Thayer & Williams. Chamberlain drew the plans, furnished shelving, etc., for the building, and asked for something over $5,000 for his work. This Boutin refused to give, claiming that it is $3,000 in excess of what was asked before the work was done. A large number of witnesses have been examined.

Work of Thieves.

A barn at the corner of Fifth and Gillis streets belonging to James Adams was entered last night and a set of harness taken.

A. A. Miller, of Harlem, reports a silver hunting case watch taken from his person.

C. E. Jones, 217 West Eleventh street, says someone has stolen his buggy whip.

E. A. Wolfe, Tenth and Wyandotte streets, to-day reported that someone entered his house last night and took a pair of pants, his vest, watch and chain and a bunch of keys.

The Craig-Nye Wedding.

Mr. Mortimer Craig of the Gillis opera house, and Miss Nellie Nye, sister of Mrs. Bernard Donnelly, were married this afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Donnelly residence, Eighth and Locust streets. They leave at once on a tour through the southwest, to be absent during the remainder of the month. Upon their return Mr. and Mrs. Craig will begin house keeping in the Centropolis flats.

Hume Brought Back.

Chas. Hume, who committed the big diamond robbery at Mrs. Parsons's, out on the Westport road, was arrested in St. Louis and brought back to the city this morning, and taken before Judge Worthen. He waived examination and was held to the grand jury in $2,500 bonds, in default of which he rests in the Second street jail. The jewelry was recovered.

An Indignation Meeting.

The citizens of West Kansas held an indignation meeting in Kelley's hall, Ninth and Mulberry streets, last night, to denounce the Hannibal railroad company for having removed the stairs leading down from Bluff street. Father Dalton, ex-Alderman Gafney, Ed. Kelley and Max Minter made speeches denouncing the action of the company. A petition was finally prepared asking the council to take action towards having the structure replaced.

Police Court News.

Five drunks, one disturber of the peace, and the usual number of nuisance cases were taxed the regular cost of justice in the recorder's court this morning. Leroy, a little colored boy, charged with living idly, had to face eight officers who swore positively that he was guilty. It was more than his proud spirit could bear, and he wilted when the court fined him $52.50. This will allow Leroy to eat his Christmas turkey at the workhouse.

Mr. O'Neil Russell's Celtic Lecture.

The proposed lecture of Mr. O'Neil Russell on the "Language, Literature and Amusements of Ireland," announced to be delivered this evening under the auspices, and at the hall of Eire Og, northwest corner of Seventh and Main streets, is unavoidably postponed. Mr. Russell expresses his regret, and will take an early opportunity of delivering his lecture in Kansas City.

Death of an Old Soldier.

Edward J. Shehan, an old soldier, age 75, died early this morning, after a long illness, at 1521 Main. Deceased was a member of Lafayette lodge No. 16, A. F. and A. M., Manhatton, Kas. The Masonic board of relief, which has provided for Mr. Shehan and his aged wife, extends an invitation to all master Masons to attend the funeral services.

A Small Runaway.

A slight runaway took place about 11 o'clock to-day on Grand avenue, near Fourteenth street. The team of Dave Flanagan, a butcher on Twelfth street, between McGee and Oak, became frightened at some boys playing on the street and ran away, but was stopped before any damage was done, save a little injury to the wagon.

Articles of Association.

The "Exchange Building Association of Kansas City" yesterday filed articles of association. The capital stock is $208,000, divided into 416 shares.

The "Farm and Homestead Association of Kansas City" also filed articles of association with a capital stock of $10,000, divided into 200 shares.

Dead Denver.

Mayor Moore returned from his newly-purchased ranche in southern Colorado, last night. He says Denver is a pretty city but completely dead as far as business is concerned. The people of that city, he states, say they never before saw the streets so deserted and so little evidence of commercial activity.

Sudden Death.

DEAF AND DUMB VICTIMS.

Arrest of the Steward of the Olathe State Institution for the Education of Indigent Deaf and Dumb Children on Charges Preferred by a Mute Girl.

Special Telegram to The Star.

OLATHE, Kas., Nov. 11.—Probably the most disgusting travesty on public charity in the history of charitable institutions existed in the Olathe state institution for the education of indigent deaf and dumb children, during the school year which closed last spring with the expiration of the Glick administration. During the course of the winter term the people of Olathe were shocked by frequent vague reports of the revolting horrors enacted within the walls of the big institution, but as no definite charges were preferred they were powerless to interfere. They were able, however, to see and criticize the disgusting evidences of immorality which made themselves apparent in the treatment and conduct of the pupils on the streets. The state buildings accommodated severel hundred white boys and girls ranging in ages from 7 to 17 years. These children, like animals, are governed entirely by instinct, when their actions are not controlled by the proper authorities. While their characters are forming they are always powerfully influenced by their surroundings and the examples set by their superintendent and teachers. During the school year which closed last spring these children were constantly subjected and exposed to the most disgusting immorality. It was nothing unusual to see a dozen of the largest girls eagerly devouring the pictures and contents of a Police Gazette while standing in front of the institution. The young men of the town were permitted to take the mute girls out walking nights and the boys and girls of the institution were thrown together indiscriminately. In addition to these exterior evidences of immorality there were constant reports of the indecent relations existing between the largest mute girls and the male officials of the institution, which were occasionally corroborated to the satisfaction of the people here by the sudden withdrawal of a girl by her parents. In all such cases the cause of the withdrawal was suppressed by the parents out of regard for the reputation of their victimized children and a fear of disgusting publicity. The charges of indecency included most of the male employes from the superintendent down. The management of the lady teachers was so lax that some of them were careless in their conduct and set bad examples to the easily influenced girls under their care.

The first definite verification of public opinion concerning this official nest of corruption came last Saturday night with the arrest of the steward of the institution, A. S. McCulloh, on charges of adultery, seduction and bastardy, preferred by Mary Kelly, a former pupil. Mr. McCulloh's wife was also employed in the institution at the time the alleged crimes were committed. Since the change of administration compelled McCulloh and his wife to leave the state buildings Mr. McCulloh has been employed as traveling correspondent of the Topeka Commonwealth. He is a Knight Templar and has been for years past the Olathe correspondent of the Kansas City Journal. He was one of the Republicans reappointed by Governor Glick, and has always been supposed to exercise some influence over the Kansas legislative committee on charitable institutions. McCulloh, after remaining in jail during Sunday and Monday, obtained bond in the sum of $700 yesterday and was released. He says his arrest was a blackmailing scheme, but it is said that still more revolting developments are in store for the near future. The preliminary examination will be held to-morrow. The people of Olathe are anxious to have the entire administration investigated and arrests made wherever crime can be fixed on the officials.

The present administration is all that can be desired by the best people in the community. The superintendent is a strict disciplinarian and his influence over both teachers and pupils has been good.

Amusements.

LIFE AT OLD HARVARD.

A PICTURE OF A GREAT UNIVERSITY.

The Course of Study Pursued—The Student Free to Select His Own Studies—The Three Great Divisions of Students—College Recreations—Other Notes.

Special Correspondence of The Star.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 6.—As I wrote you I intended doing, I have taken a room in Cambridge, which is really a part of Boston, near the college yard, and through acquaintance with a number of students I have had during the past few weeks a fair glimpse at the interior of college life. At Harvard this life seems so many sided and complex that it is difficult to understand it all at once, and much more so to attempt to describe it. The difference between the large institutions and the smaller colleges is very much the same as the difference between a country village and a large city. In the small colleges everybody knows everybody else—his past history, present occupation and future prospects; everybody pursues pretty much the same course of study, which is usually prescribed by the college authorities, and the different classes, freshmen, sophomore, etc., are sharply divided by the subjects assigned to each in the curriculum. In the advanced type of American universities, of which Harvard is an extreme example, everybody does pretty much as he likes, knows only whom he pleases, and is left as severely alone by those he don't know as he would be in a great city. In theory, the university models after the German university plan; in practice it is a combination of the German university and the American college. For example, like a German university it offers courses of lectures on almost every conceivable subject, from among which a student is at liberty to select what courses he pleases. He may "cut" science if he likes and take nothing but the classics; he may "cut" classics and science and take nothing but history; he may take nothing but philosophy, or political economy, or philology, or anything else to which he wishes to devote himself. After passing his entrance examinations, which are, in technical phrase, pretty stiff, and cover a good deal of Latin, mathematics, and elementary science, about the only prescribed work he has during his college course is physics, chemistry, and some one modern language in his freshman year and English composition during the three subsequent years. From the "election pamphlet," as it is called, he can select almost at his sweet will from among the two hundred and more courses of lectures set down in it. "Almost," for there are a few starred courses which require a certain amount of previous study before one can enter them. Say our freshman has safely gotten through his first year without "flunking" in enough courses to cause him to be "dropped." He has nothing now "prescribed" before him but the fifteen or twenty themes and forensics for the whole three years, and an hour a week in rhetoric for the year just ahead of him. If he has not already determined what line of study he intends to follow, if he is a wise young man he does so now. Suppose he is given to classics. He selects out of the thirty or forty "courses" (series of lectures and recitations during a year) the two or three particular courses he wishes to begin with. In each of these he has three hours of lecture or recitation a week, making in all, say nine, hours. He has now to fill out with some other course the remaining three of the twelve hours which the college requires him to take. He makes his selection and then probably adds one or two "extra" courses for his own gratification. The four "regular" courses are the only ones on which he has to pass an examination. As a rule the working students, it is said, take between sixteen and twenty hours a week. This amount of lectures and recitations, together with preparation for them and outside reading, is said very fully to fill one's time. If the freshman, instead of keeping up his classics, prefers history, or political economy, he cuts classics and takes what he pleases in these. If he cares to he can pursue one subject, or if he does not he can mix up the course to suit himself. As a matter of fact, it is said the majority of the students are going toward history, political economy and science, to the exclusion of classics and mathematics. This, of course, is merely the tendency, not by any means the universal rule, as the last named departments offer every inducement to students, both in the way of instructors and number and variety of courses laid down. The tendency away from classics, however, is very well shown by the late action of the college in removing Greek from among the requirements for admission. The two seasons of terror to the undergraduate, otherwise the semi-annual examinations, come in February and in June. Then, according to the old college rhyme, "they grind who never ground before, and they who have ground grind now all the more." The victims are shut up in a large examination room with a number of proctors to watch them, and are allowed three hours in which to write satisfactory answers to the questions given out on printed sheets of paper. Forty per cent passes one, but this forty per cent seems often to be a sticker, as it is said a pretty good number fail to get it. They are not usually, however, it is needless to say, the working men of the college.

And this last remark leads me to the three great divisions of the students into the "grinds," the "bums," and the large intermediate class which goes without a name. The "grind" is the sickly looking combination of loose joints, illfitting clothes, long hair, and industry, who never shines, but always "gets there" in the way of high marks and accompanying lucrative scholarships; the "bum" is the very gorgeous young man with plenty of money, a bull pup, a passion either for athletics or dissipation, and an unconquerable aversion to work. The third class, which is said largely to outnumber either of the others, is made up of students who are at once good fellows and fairly hard workers. Their standing is always good, and sometimes they are at the head of their class; but they usually are willing to content themselves with moderate marks in order to add some of the pleasures of college life to its work. It is said these men are often among the best athletes, and are usually prominent in literary and society affairs.

In all these departments they have ample opportunity of exercising their inclinations and ability. Of athletics, it is hardly necessary to speak since the extent to which young men, nominally students, devote themselves to rowing and base ball has become a standing joke. But it may be as well to-day that the students defend themselves by pointing to the college standing of their athletes, which is nearly always up to the average and often much above it. They say, too, that undue prominence is given in public opinion to college athletics on account of the sporting events being almost the only matters of sufficient general interest in college life to bear reporting in the newspapers. The public cares more to hear about a great pitcher than about the writer of a prize essays.

However, this may be, it is certain that at Harvard, as at other large universities, the amount and quality of the voluntary literary work done by the students on their papers and magazines must convince an outsider that a part, at least, of their time is employed otherwise than in the gymnasium and on the base ball field and on the water. Both at Yale and Harvard and, I believe, also at some of the other universities, a daily paper, containing college news and editorials on subjects of college interest, are successfully carried on by the students. Each of the larger universities has several college publications in addition. At Harvard, besides the Daily Crimson, which is delivered early every morning at subscribers' rooms, the students publish two semi-weeklies, the Advocate, and the well known illustrated Lampoon, and a literary monthly, which has appeared for the first time this year. They are all well printed and carefully edited. The Lampoon's wit is freely copied and its illustrations have more than once been republished in book form. The Advocate and the new monthly contain short stories, sketches and verses, of which many would be creditable in much more pretentious publications. In addition to its regular board of editors each paper relies more or less upon the college at large for its supply of reading matter. The rivalry for undergraduate favor is usually spirited, it is needless to say, and the satirical Lampoon often depicts its contemporaries in ways very well calculaed to stir up their wrath. The patron saint of the college literary man, I may add, seems to be the editor of the New York Life, into whose bosom he hopes safely to come after finishing his probationary college career. The general tone of the college verse, and the number of undergraduate articles appearing in the columns of Life would at least indicate as much. Now and then, however, one sees a short story, or poem, in one of the great magazines, such as the Century, or the Atlantic, bearing an undergraduate's name.

As to society, a student sees either much or little of it according first, of course, to his introductions, and next, to his inclinations. If he is of good New England family he has the entree to the best Boston and Cambridge circles, and may air his graces and accomplishments to his heart's content in the smiles of the cultured daughters of Beacon street. If he is from a distance, and without introductions, he is likely to see little more of society than he would if he went as a stranger into any large city. To be sure, his position as a student gives him a slight advantage, but it will depend upon his personal exertions to reap the benefits of it. He need not lack for social life, however, if he is a good fellow and content with the society of other good fellows. On the college yard he can find amusement enough of one kind and another in the rooms of his friends to keep his spare hours from hanging heavily on his hands. Card parties, wine parties and little accidental gatherings, where music and conversation fill an evening are of everyday occurrence. Everybody lives in the dormitories who is lucky enough to secure rooms in them, and so you seldom have to leave the college yard to see your friends. The dormitory system, by the way, is a thoroughly admirable one. The rooms are in suites, consisting of a large study and either two bedrooms or one, which are rented from the college unfurnished. Two men usually take one suite of rooms, paying for it anywhere from $100 to $250 a year, inclusive of the care of it. They then fit it up to suit themselves. The ordinary college room is comfortably furnished with study tables, sofa, easy chairs, window seat, heavy curtains, pictures, college "shingles," etc. All sorts of odd bric-a-brac is likely to be scattered around, according to the occupants' tastes. A grate fire adds an air of comfort to the very cosy looking study.

In some of the rooms, however, inhabited by representives of the jeunesse doree, everything is gotten up in an utterly regardless way. The carpet and the window hangings cost a little fortune in themselves, and artistic decorator has been given carte blanche to do his worst. My young lord is certainly well fixed in his rooms, and at his club table where he eats he pays from eight to twelve dollars a week for board; let us hope his college standing is up to the same height.

The interior of one of the rooms where a little party is going on is a sight not soon to be forgotten. The burners of the chandelier are in full blaze and the light struggles bravely through the clouds of smoke which fill the room. Half a dozen well dressed young men, a part of them probably wearing the loose sporting jackets affected by the athletes, are scattered about in easy attitudes over the chairs and window seats. Tobacco, cigarettes, and a pleasant smelling compound in a bowl adorn the central table. At the piano in one corner some one is drumming out a college song, which is occasionally caught up in the chorus by the others in the room. Maybe a card table is going and I fear from the sharp click of "chips" that these wicked young men are actually betting on a hand at poker. Shouts of laughter now and then burst out at some good, but possibly not overpolite, story; and this pleasant mixture of mirth, music and mischief (i. e. poker) keeps on into the wee sma' hours. This, dear madame, is, of course, not your son at college, however—just as he writes you he is putting in every minute at his studies; but if it were, he need not necessarily get much harm from it, providing the good sense for which he is distinguished kept him from carrying it to excess.

Another source of much social pleasure to the university student are his secret society connections. The secrets themselves don't amount to anything, but they add a bond of union, and shut off, as it were, from the outside world the little groups in whose bosoms lie the sacred mysteries of initiation. The forms prescribed for the neophyte are sometimes very terrible to him and very ludicrous to outsiders. In one society, for instance, the candidate is obliged to wear publicly for a week any outrageous costume his tormentors may devise for him, and he is obliged during the same length of time to execute any command any one of them may lay upon him. He has always to go on the run when he is called, and must behave very respectfully in the presence of any member of the society. As this society is very select and is composed chiefly of very rich men, the most fastidious dude will consent to go clothed in rags, and to submit for a week's time to almost every kind of grotesque indignity, in order to get into it. He consoles himself, no doubt, with the thought of the revenge he will take upon those who are to come after him. Of course there are other societies of more serious turn which do not indulge in those boyish vagaries. Most of the best societies, however, attach a good deal of ludicrous by-play to the forms of initiation.

To the society man, these little incidents of initiatory unpleasantness are of little importance compared with the pleasure his society connection affords him. Once a week he meets his friends in pleasant rooms, and passes an evening fit, according to his notions, for the gods. There is a little supper; there is music! there are two or three bright literary parts; there is song, laughter and good fellowship. Once during the year possibly, amateur theatricals are indulged in, when a number of the young men make up into charming young women and everybody invites in his friends to witness the performance. Then it is that Miss Roseleaf removes from your mind the last doubt as to whether or not you are in love with her, by telling you that you were very handsome, as a girl. Who does not here recall the follies of which he was guilty in his own college days?

As for the honest work which is done in the college, it does not appear, as do the pleasures, on the surface. It is not the fashion now-a-days for young men to carry their serious thoughts into society with them, and throw a gloom over an hour which is meant for rest by discussing learnedly on philosophy, mathematics or natural science. No one spouts Latin quotations any more, or talks exclusively of high tragedy. Let us be thankful that custom is teaching us to keep the work we have done in the background until occasion justifies its being brought forward. Every one can see the students in the gymnasium or on the ball field, but few witness the solitary midnight lamp and the bent brow held steadily for hours over obstruse pages of maddening complexities It is true there are few pale faces or shrunken forms, which are supposed to indicate the laborious student; but for this the wise system of physical culture kept in vogue by the spirit of competition in athletics is to be thanked. The great American universities do not turn out onesided men. They afford them opportunities of developing strength of intellect, strength of body and strength of character. If they occasionally fail in their purpose, it is no more than the fate which befalls many laudable designs. L. C.

Leavenworth.

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the council chamber last night, to consider the project of the new road. The meeting was attended by the leading citizens and business men of the city, and was called to order at 8 o'clock by Hon. Alexander Caldwell, after which several interesting speeches were made in discussing the road. From the outcome of the meeting it was plainly seen that the road will be built to a certainty, and it will not be long before the work will be commenced. Mr. Len. Smith's proposition was heartily endorsed. A committee was appointed of four men from each ward and township to see that the petition for the new road is circulated, so that each tax payer can attach his or her signature in their respective wards. The committee was instructed to meet this morning, when it is thought active work will be commenced immediately. The meeting then adjourned.

An Odd Move.

POSTSCRIPT.

6:00 O'CLOCK.

A TERRIBLE SMASH-UP.

A BAD WRECK THIS AFTERNOON.

Two Ladies Badly Hurt—How Mr. Hyde Takes His Appointment—Late Capital News—A Suicide, a Murder and a Fatal Accident—Other Late News.

At 4:30 this afternoon a most disastrous runaway occurred at the corner of Sixth and Wyandotte streets, which may yet result fatally. At that hour Mrs. George N. Petrie, of 1513 Holmes street, in company with her mother, Mrs. A. H. Powell, of Utica, Mo., aged about 60, and her sister, Mrs. Alice Glassop, of Jacksonville, Ill., were driving down Wyandotte street in a single seated buggy. At that point a horse which had been hitched at the curb became frightened from some cause and dashed into the rig driven by Mrs. Petrie. There was a crash as the two vehicles came together, and then Mrs. Petrie's horse started on a run down Wyandotte street toward the river. One lady was thrown from the buggy as it started and Mrs. Petrie followed a moment later, when two wheels of the buggy had been broken off. Then the hundreds of spectators who had already gathered saw the rig, one side resting on the ends of the axletrees, dashing down the street, and the sole occupant of the buggy, an aged woman with flowing white locks vainly trying to stop the flying horse. At Fifth street the horse broke loose from the buggy and the old lady was thrown violently to the pavement where she lay as if dead.

Strong hands quickly picked up the limp form of the plucky old lady who had nobly endeavored to check the frightened animal, and tenderly carried her to a neighboring drug store where the physicians ascertained that she was not seriously injured, provided she could stand the nervous shock. Her injuries about the head consist of several deep scalp wounds, but the physician who attended her said they would not prove fatal. She complained of feeling dazed and at times seemed almost unconscious.

Mrs. Glassop was the more seriously injured of the two; her left leg was broken, and it was feared that she had received in addition, severe internal injuries.

Mrs. Petrie, with wonderful pluck and unmindful of her own injuries, at once prepared to have her mother and sister moved home and a cot was procured upon which Mrs. Glassop was placed as tenderly as possible.

THE TURNER EXAMINATION.

The Testimony of Conway Drawing to a Close—Tickets With Blood on Them.

At 5 o'clock this afternoon Conway was still on the witness stand, but his testimony was drawing to a close. He was then undergoing a redirect examination. His closing testimony was as follows:

"On the day of the murder I think my wife asked me to have dinner about 11:20 o'clock. I don't remember, when before the coroner's jury, of saying that when I was lying on the bed my wife was sitting on the bed and asked me to have dinner. When I went into the house in the morning I washed, and after I had had a sleep I again took a wash. My recollection is that I wiped on a soiled towel, but am not willing to testify that I did not get a clean towel out of the drawer. My recollection is that my little girl came back, before I left.

If I testified before the coroner's jury that my wife seldom ate dinner without me being there, I did not tell the truth. I know it was not 10 o'clock when I left home that day, but I did not look at the clock. My recollection is that I gave my wife a $10 silver certificate two days before. I then had left perhaps a dollar, perhaps more. I don't remember of taking in any that day. I got some head in Westport, but do not recollect paying for it. Mrs. Sullivan is a married lady; I have known her about two years. I have no recollection of seeing any one there when I left the milk. On the road out to Westport I met a Mr. Wheeler. I knew Mr. Wheeler back in DeKalb county. I made several stops on the road and two at Westport, at the latter place going to a grocery store and butcher shop. I then drove out to the dairy. It was forty minutes after my arrival that I heard the news of the murder.

I had been milking about twenty minutes when I heard the news. When the boy said my people were hurt, I did not suspect that they had been foully dealt with. On my way to Westport, immediately after, I met Mrs. Oldham, who was driving in her buggy home. I said to her that I had got news that my wife and child had been hurt. At the mill I asked what was the matter. Previous to this time I would swear that I didn't say that my wife and child were murdered. I don't know what time I arrived. I don't think the bodies had been disturbed when I arrived, and think the bed clothes were not over my wife's face. Previous to that day I was not conscious of having any more affection for my child than for the wife. I don't remember of expressing myself that way in the presence of Chief Speers. No harsh words ever passed between me and my wife, nor did I ever strike her. In passing along the railroads I have seen coupling pins since coming to Kansas City. I have seen them a dozen times this summer in the "Gulf yards," but would not swear that I did not have them in my hands.

The defense here commenced being through with Mr. Conway, and Major Woodson took up the re-direct examination. Mr. Conway continued:

"I did not murder my wife (breaking down and weeping.) I did not murder my little child (sobbing heavily.) The settlement I have been talking about all the time is the settlement with Turner. (Two tickets were handed him.) These are not my tickets, but Mr. Turner's."

Major Woodson said he would offer them as evidence. Mr. Beebe objected, and Major Woodson said he would offer them again. The tickets were seen by the STAR reporter and have what appear to be blood marks on them, marks that might be made by a person putting bloody fingers on them.

Special Telegram to The Star.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 11.—Mr. Hyde was the center of a congratulating coterie in the Southern hotel rotunda this morning when he was asked for some expression of his intentions regarding the taking up of his official burden as postmaster. "Why, bless me, I hardly have known that I was appointed. I have had no doubt about it, you understand, since I was in Washington in October, but the first I knew about it in a definite shape was the list of yesterday's appointments and the congratulatory dispatches of the whole Missouri colony in Washington," said Mr. Hyde. He continued: "I cannot say when I will assume charge. I shall call on Mr. Wells and have a conversation on matters relating to the change and decide upon how to go to work."

"Have you selected your assistants?"

"Only the first assistant, and I haven't asked him about it yet. I shall make changes in the line of removing causes of existing complaints and endeavor to correct certain lack of discipline which seems to exist in certain quarters."

The clothing was burned from her person and her body burned to a crisp, from the effects of which she died this morning.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11."—The coast survey bureau is a very expensive institutio," says a prominent treasury official. "It has always appeared strange to me that its work has never been completed. It has been in operation for nearly eighty years, and it would seem to me that the survey of the American coast ought to have been concluded within that time. Perhaps, however, the changes worked by time and tide in the contours of the coast have been sufficient to keep them busy for the past century. Still, I think, that a corps engineers connected with the war or navy departments would have been able to have kept track of all such possible changes if the bureau had made the survey a complete one and the dissolved."

A Fatal Stab.

Special Telegram to The Star.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 11.—A desperate attack was made by Wm. Dover, a discharged fireman of the steamer David R. Powell, upon Henry Kennedy, captain of the fireman's watch, this morning. Both parties are colored and the trouble arose because of the discharge of Dover for incompetency while on the trip from Vicksburg. Dover asked Kennedy to have his place back and when he refused knocked Kennedy down with a stick of cord wood and then cut him with an axe, the blade entering the shoulder blade making a wound five inches in length. Dover was arrested. Kennedy will die.

A Woman's Suicide.

Special Telegram to The Star.

JOPLIN, Mo., Nov. 11.—About 5 o'clock last evening the young wife of Thomas Dolar, formerly city attorney, took strychnine. She died in great agony about an hour after. Every effort to save her failed, she having spasms before the physicians arrived.

Shortly before she left her babe with her father-in-law's family, saying, apparently in a joke and good spirits: "Take care of it." She had a kind husband. No cause is assigned for the rash act, unless family troubles about property and reduced circumstances are considered.

Wants an Office Bad.

Special Telegram to The Star.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 11.—"Some very queer applications are made by office-seekers," said N. M. Bell, superintendent of the foreign mail service, "and there's one that deserves to be classed as such. A man wants me to endorse him for an office and assigns as a reason that fifteen years ago I promised to vote for a friend of his for United States senator. I do not remember to have seen the applicant before in my life but he appears to know me very well."

She Lost Her Balance.

Mrs. Toney Davis, colored, wife of Tom Davis, fell from the second story of the building at the southwest corner of Fifth and May streets, about 4:30 o'clock this afternoon, bruising herself considerably. She was in a door that leads off into the street, calling her little boy, when she leaned over too far and lost her balance.

A FUNNY MISTAKE.

How Mr. Lamar Was Mistaken for Ben Butler—The Secretary as a Philanthropist.

Globe-Democrat.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 6.—One of Secretary Lamar's characteristics is sympathy for inebriates. He is never happier than when he is pulling some poor fellow out of the ditch. Some time ago there was a disreputable-looking office-seeker hanging around the capital hotels. He repeatedly got drunk and made a nuisance of himself. Finally he went to the police court, and thence to the work-house. Mr. Lamar heard of his fate. He had known the drunkard in better days, and believed there was hope of reclamation. She got him pardoned, gave him an appointment in the Indian service, and sent him out to a reservation where whisky isn't to be had, except by violation of law. The secretary also gave the man's wife a place worth $900 a year, and sent her with her husband to take care of him at government expense. This occurred three months ago nearly. Several reports have been received by the secretary from those cautioned to look after the reformed drunkard, and they are all of a character, which pleases the secretary greatly.

This kind of philanthropy, however, has its drawbacks. The other day an individual tottered into a street car where the secretray was to throw a dollar through the opening in the front door. By and by the driver passed back the change done up in a little package. The drunken man shoved them in his pocket. Pretty soon the driver opened the door and called out sharply: "Put in your fare." The drunken man stared, but didn't move. People began to titter. "Never mind," said Mr. Lamar, looking benevolently at the befogged passenger, "I'll fix it for you," and he stepped up and put a nickel in the box. The situation was still misty, but the drunken man recognized that in some way the secretary had done him a friendly act. He extended his hand, and Mr. Lamar shook it, saying "That's all right."

The drunken man gazed steadily and earnestly at his benefactor for nearly five minutes. Then a broad grin spread over his face as he reached out his hand and said: "How d'ye do, General Butler; I thought I know'd yer; fit with yer at New Orleans!"

Mr. Lamar accepted the hand again, but with less suavity. "I know'd yer," continued the drunken man, and he kept on grinning while people began to snicker.

"You don't think he takes me for Ben Butler, do you?" asked Mr. Lamar, rather painfully, of a friend who sat beside him. The secretary wasn't left long in doubt, for after another hard look the drunken man delightedly pointed to his left optic and broke out with: "Got yer eye fixed since we was at New Orleans, hain't yer?"

Mr. Lamar dropped out at the next corner, with an effort to look responsive to the smiles which followed him.

The Exposition Opened.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 10.—The inaugural ceremonies of the North, South and Central American exposition are progressing smoothly. The weather is clear and pleasant. Commercial exchanges are closed and all other business in a measure suspended. Flags were displayed throughout the city. United States, state and city officials, foreign consuls and invited guests. The procession moved through the principal streets to the head of Canal street, where steamers were in readiness to convey the participants to the exposition grounds.
